In Babylon King Belshazzar invited his officers to a feast.

As the wine flowed freely, he remembered the cups, taken from the Jewish Temple during the reign of his father, Nebuchadnezzar. While they drank to their idols of gold and silver, there suddenly appeared before them the fingers of a hand, writing on the wall.

Belshazzar trembled with fear and sent for astrologers, but none of them could interpret. Then he sent for God's servant, Daniel.

"You have not humbled your heart, but have defied the Lord of heaven. You've not glorified the God in whose hand your breath is."

His words are 'mene, mene, tekel, parsin' -- and 'tekel' means: 'You are weighed in the balance and are found wanting.'"
